Clive's Comments

A common theme in some beauty product advertisements is the concept of 'anti aging'. There are a mass of products guaranteed to stop you aging. There is even a world wide brand promoting a common essential oil under the name 'immortelle' as it is supposed to prevent women from aging. Personally I want to age as it is just another term for getting older and the alternative is to not get older – in other words to become dead. That is not a preferred option. Really the best anti-aging cream is something that has fatal results.

We are all getting older and most of us will show signs of this. Hopefully we will look older but still retain both our mental and physical abilities. We want to age but still enjoy life. We want to transition from work to retired to doing nothing in a simple, healthy manner. This is what 'anti-aging' really means.

As we age we cannot help but to remember our past and to compare then with now. Unfortunately our grand parents, then our parents and now us like to say: "in my day", "When I was your age we" and so-on. Some of the comparisons are fair and life was a lot harder in the past. Some of these comparisons do point to a softening between the generations. Others are just us feeling we are better and stronger than the new generation.

The last heat wave was a case of a much softer world. It is interesting to look at photos of labourers from early 20th century. Dressed in long trousers...

...waistcoats and long sleeves yet still working in the heat of the day. Very few of us over 60 grew up with air-conditioning. We had it installed in one room in early seventies and were one of the first in our neighbourhood. Most parts of the tropical regions, even now, don't have air conditioning in every house. No-one in these scenarios suffers and most just deal with a hot world. Yes it is great to go from a hot and humid outdoors into a cool, dry room but it is an expensive luxury. There are many things that my generation consider a luxury and those born post 1990 consider a basic necessity or even a right. This is all part of a constantly improving world. However some level of perspective is warranted. There has always been a line between those who work hard to improve their lives and those who simply wait and demand things. There are so many folk who work hard to make a better life for themselves and their families. They are frugal, they earn extra income, they save hard and are focused on an end goal. Their aim is for a better life not one that looks good and meets the trends. They are also wise and look at actual not perceived realities. Unfortunately many regulations reward the non-savers equal to the savers. I get angry at the constant lament about cost of living. Without getting into the debate over 'smashed avo on toast' or "three $6.00 coffees per day" we should just look at the basics. I am sure our parents (my generation) would be completely baffled how a person could go and pay an hour's wages for some avocado on a piece of toast and a cup of coffee. They would also wonder how people can complain about housing affordability when they bought a small 3 bedroom house with no furnishings, no landscaping, no driveway and minimal appliances and the modern generation expects all of these plus a movie room, fully enclosed garage and a few other luxuries in their first house. I have travelled across many countries and lived and worked in three. There is always a debate about the value of various items in relation to exchange rates. This is not a real guide to costs etc. It is the same with comparing living costs from the seventies and the twenties. One dollar in US and one dollar in 2024 and one dollar in 1985 are not truly comparable. The only real comparison is in minutes worked. I am not sure of exact figures but I used to have chart that showed a loaf of bread in 1966 was say 12 minutes work on base wages and only 8 minutes in 1986. In comparing prices we must compare like to like. Another of my favourites is the continual whinge about the cost of petrol now compared to the past. It is much cheaper now! In 1978 I was earning $1 per hour as a labourer. That sort of work would now attract a wage of around $40 per hour. I was paying 14c per litre – really cheap?????. Currently base level unleaded fuel is around $2.20 per litre. So in 1978 for one hour I would earn enough to buy 7.0 litres of fuel yet in 2024 I could buy 18 litres of fuel. My first car was a standard family station wagon with a small six cylinder engine that would do 20 mpg = 14.1 l/100km. Now I drive a 3lt family sedan and average 8 lt/100km = 35.3 mpg. So for one hour worked I was getting around 50km in 1978 and now I am getting around 225 km or 4.5 more distance. Question: Is fuel dear now or then???? Reality is that we should look at what we have and what we can afford and then decide what is expensive. We should also assess what is needed and what is a luxury with a view to reducing the luxuries while we save to buy the necessities. As an industry we really must have plants on the necessity side of the ledger!
