Clive's Comments

Happy New Year, Happy New Decade. Happy New Millennium doesn't seem that long ago, but the world has really changed. In December 1999 we were all looking forward to the mega New Year's Eve parties with many venues being booked out two years in advance. At the same time, we were all convinced that the electronic world was ready to collapse. The propensity for human laziness meant that supposedly all the computers in the whole world had stored dates as dd/mm/yy instead of dd/mm/yyyy. This meant the computer system would think we were back in January 1900. Planes were going to drop out of the sky, computers would fail to turn on, medical equipment wouldn't work. Basically, anything with a date would not turn on. All because we were lazy with dates, but we couldn't learn and called the problem Y2K – shortened date!! So, what happened? nothing! What disaster will befall us in this decade? We know we have a changing climate and some, most or all of this is caused by man-made pollution. I am not going to debate how much we cause, how much is due to natural variations in the Earth's climate or how much is due to the sun or other universal changes but I do know that the world will not be destroyed in the next two decades. Depending on the level of temperature changes we may have some major changes in what grows where and there will be some shift in sea levels. Life will be different but that is always the case. I wish we could get away from the rhetoric and the wild generalisations to try and assimilate some facts and truths. As a person who studied evolution, botany, zoology and zoogeography I have some understanding of the capacity of life on this planet to change and evolve. Shorter generation organisms can make huge genetic shifts in a few years. Look at the ability of pests and diseases of plants and animals to become resistant to our pesticides. This is not intelligent life changing the way it grows but simple organisms evolving through natural genetic mutations. Although some plants can only grow in very defined conditions their progeny can quickly change with alterations to their local climate. Whatever happens with a warming climate we can rest assured that plant life will adjust – and will do so within a few generations. Be it microscopic algae in the world's oceans or large climax rainforests, they will adapt. Plants want to grow and provided they have light, water and food that is exactly what they will do. They will change to meet the challenges of a different environment. The doomsayers predicting the end of life are doing the world a real disservice. They are scaring our children; they are fuelling the arguments of the people who say nothing is wrong and they are diverting attention from the...

...real issues. Without pushing any side of the man-made climate change issue, we can acknowledge that we are wasting resources and creating too much waste. Instead of blaming the Australian Government for causing this year's bushfires we should all be focused on making better use of what we have. Stop worrying about plastic bags but instead teach people that buying chopped up pumpkin in a plastic tray and wrapped in plastic does far more damage. Buy a whole or cut pumpkin and the energy used in production is a fraction and the waste is fully compostable. Why oh why must we be so lazy as to buy pre-cut potatoes, pre-peeled carrots, pre-chopped beans? Stop buying new phones or new TVs or new anything when there is nothing wrong with current one other than it is not NEW! Our twenty-three-year-old television died, and we need to buy a new one. I felt sick taking this huge piece of equipment to the electronic tip. It should have been repairable but not only is replacing cheaper than repairing, I doubt I could have found someone to repair it. We are a contrasting community in Australia. We will dump a perfectly good phone because there is a newer one but will fight tooth and nail to save a nearly dead plant. So, let's put the debate on how much of climate change is due to whether we have coal fired power or solar power aside and focus on buying more fresh produce with no packaging. When you buy a sandwich or cake that you are going to start eating before you leave the shop, say no to the bag. Simple changes like these will make a big difference without hurting anyone. Changes that can and should be made regardless of your politics or climate religion. Changes that reduce carbon emissions by reducing wasted consumption. It is good now to be able to refer to the decade as the 'twenties'. I never quite got my head around 'the noughties' or 'the teens' so this is better. Anyway, it is a new year and a new decade. Let's make them great and positive. Encourage more people to use more plants and then we will all have economic success. So, wishing you all a happy and prosperous New Year and stay cool!
