Clive's Comments

What a change in a month. Victoria has just gone 28 days without a new Covid case which means we have technically 'eradicated' the virus. I suspect that was the aim of the Andrews Government from the start. This is a good thing but is only of real benefit if we can keep the virus from getting out of the quarantine facilities of people coming in from overseas. I think all states have virtually stopped 'local transmission' cases which basically means it is safe to travel and move around the community with out fear of the virus. As usual Victoria has to be different and we still have compulsory mask wearing when indoors or less than 1.5m from other people. Maybe Dan will remove this in his next review in early December.

It is great to see the state borders open up – slowly. Hopefully WA and Qld will accept that they are part of Australia and remove all quarantine/entry restrictions very soon. The media tell us that the politics of isolation seems to fair well for premiers in the polls. Not sure if I really understand why. When Victoria had hundreds of public cases I could see the reluctance to have Victorians enter other states. However with almost zero community transmission around the country why is this still the case? Do the people of WA really want to be isolated from the other states? Seems crazy to me when so much of our economy is reliant on people and freight moving around the country.

I chair our local Agribusiness Association and at our AGM this week it was really interesting to see the way different sectors have come through the last eight months. The nurseries and cut flower industries have had their best years in memory. The fresh fruit sector has also done well but are worried about lack of labour for this year's harvest. The wineries that rely on commercial trade and export have struggled but the smaller ones that are reliant on cellar door did it hard during the...

...full lockdown but have taken off since the 'ring of steel' around Melbourne was removed. Some also did well over the winter with on-line sales.

The agritourism enterprises did it hard early when the Asian tourists were stopped. They were then busy for the short open period and then went quiet again. All are booming now that Melbournians are free to travel. We have a bed and breakfast which had no-one over winter and as soon as the state restrictions on movement were lifted we started to book-out. Almost all are people from Melbourne who just want to leave the city for some country relaxation. It is not clear if the tourist businesses will make up for the lost income but they are certainly on the survival road now.

There is however a very scary cloud on the horizon. 12 months ago the thought that the state governments could/would declare a state of emergency and shut down all business was impossible to conceive. We now know that not only can they do this but they will if they feel it is needed. The biggest fear is the level of lockdown they can do. Dan Andrews stated that he only did what was recommended by the medical authorities but we now find that some of the things he did were his call. It is this level of authority, unchecked decision making and lack of appeal that is the real worry for business activity.

Last week SA had an outbreak and due to the stupidity of a food worker the SA government panicked and shut down the state. I now worry about how can any business plan? We are planning our annual Herb and Chilli Festival for March 2021 and I will be on edge until the morning of the second day. What happens if there is an outbreak that week and the premier decides to shut down Victoria on 24 hour's notice? What do we do? Many nurseries plan high promotion weekends. They spend money on stock, staff and marketing, what will they do if the day before the state is shut down? This is frightening as we understand the risk of not shutting down but we can't have businesses not planning due to the fear of shut downs, or planning and then losing thousands of dollars on the whim of the politicians.

Sure we will have a vaccine by then but there could be another virus. What we have seen this year is that a Premier can make unilateral decisions to close down a state or lock its borders. The SA Premier did the right thing and released the lock down once they sorted out the problem but the Victorian and Queensland premiers seem to take the position of "we said we would lock down for x days and will only review after x days" I just don't know how any company that invests in events, marketing or large scale promotions can do so with confidence.

It is December and Santa is a few weeks away. I am sure he is Covid safe and will still get to everyone's home. There was an interesting story a few weeks ago of a young Italian boy asking if Santa was able to come. The Italian President went public saying the world authorities had given Santa travel exemptions. Not sure if this is the exact story but the concept is there – a fell good story. We have seen some really good things come out of the mess that was 2020.

With the borders opening up, crowd numbers being increased and a warm but not hot summer predicted Christmas is looking good. Di, Simon, Martin and myself wish you all a fantastic Christmas. We hope that Santa is kind to you but more importantly we hope you are all able to spend some quality time with your family and friends. Take time to enjoy the good things life in Australia has on offer.
