Clive's Comments

Another month and still more lockdowns and restrictions on our lives. The arguments continue about how necessary they are. There has been a big shift in attitude with the prevalence of the vaccine in the community and the shut down of most of NSW as well as Melbourne. When it was just Melbourne being locked down I feel the rest of Australia was looking at us and just grateful they weren't locked in their houses. Over the last few months we have had most of NSW shut down and periods of lockdown in Queensland such that it is now real to most of the Australian population.

With over 10 million Australians locked in their homes and subject to restrictions similar to those of many dictatorships it is becoming clear that we need a way out. What so many of us were worried about 12 months ago is now showing up in the community. There is a high level of depression and anxiety across the wider society. This is spread across all ages and demographic groups as we all miss our way of life. We miss the simple things that just seem such a basic part of life. I am not talking about world wide travel, huge concerts, major sporting events but simply visiting close family and friends, having a quick meal at the local restaurant, participating in local sport and other events. What we would call the basics of an enjoyable life...

...We all know people that are always happy and nothing seems to bother them. They are the eternal optimists who just push through whatever tries to hold them back. Everyone that I know like that is starting to fray at the edges as the lockdown starts to hurt and, worst of all, they don't see an end. They can't imagine the world back where it was and so they can't focus on a point where things will be better. We are all worried that when the current round of restrictions are lifted they can just be put back in place with no warning. We can't plan and don't have hope.

We have the vaccines available and they are being taken up rapidly in NSW and Victoria and a bit slower in the other states. There is some expectation that once we hit 70% or 80% vaccinated the world will start to open up. The Prime Minister is pushing this, the National Cabinet has agreed to it and a couple of Premiers have said they will ease off once we hit 80%. Unfortunately some Premiers are not accepting this and still maintain they can run with zero Covid.

Personally I don't believe this is possible in the long term and we should all be planning how we can live with Covid in the population. It is a hard call as the presence of Covid will bring about pressure on the medical system and will result in deaths amongst those infected. How many people will be die is just not clear. How many people are dying/suffering with the lockdowns is also not clear but it is a rising concern in the medical system.

The base fear is that Covid gets hold and we don't have enough ICU beds etc to cope. The vaccine seems to show that the number of seriously ill is significantly less amongst the vaccinated than the non-jabbed. This would indicate that the system can cope. If we stopped the lock downs we could stop finding funds to pay unemployed workers and closed businesses. Imagine how many ICU beds we could set up with those funds! We have a great medical system that is as good as any other western one. If it is managed properly it should be able to cater for the demands of a vaccinated population. I would not crumble under the increase in demand.

It is hard to have a positive outlook at the moment. Certainly, compared to the people of Afghanistan we are very well off but we live here and not there. For 100 plus years we have been a free nation of people that think, plan and take control of their own lives. We cannot do that at the moment. Our lives are controlled by people who have a different agenda from our own. People who are making the decisions they think are right but are no longer bringing us along. We can't even plan for a family lunch at Christmas as there is no guarantee that we won't be locked in again. We can't visit family interstate because we may not be allowed to go or may not be allowed to return.

All I can be positive about is that we live and work in a great industry and that in general most nurseries are, at worst surviving or, at best, growing. We have a good safe product that delivers satisfaction to so many people. It helps fight the sense of isolation and lack of life control felt by the regular person. So stay positive and plan for a busy spring and a good summer. Make plants the answer to the lockdown blues.
