Happy Australia for last month and Happy Chinese New Year for this month. Although I like the Merry Christmas and Happy New Year etc some times the US phrase of Happy Holidays does seem to cover them all. It was great to see how many people chose to celebrate Australia Day. It wasn't that long ago that this was the case for the majority of the country. I remember travelling through central Tasmania one Australia Day about ten years ago and every pub and club had some sort of Australia Day function. A large number of cards had Australian flags. I have been working in small business since the seventies and have never worked at a place where people were not give a job because of their sex, skin colour, religion or anything other than aptitude or attitude. I am sure there were cases of bias but not at a nation wide level. I have never know any truly biased people – some were on the outside but they were all fair when it came to real behaviour. We live in a country that really was equal in opportunity and you could start any where in....

.... society and move to anywhere based on your approach to life (and a little bit of luck) and people. Unfortunately now if you state you are a certain percentage indigenous you have preferential treatment in many parts of the community. This is not based on need but on genetics which is wrong. Priority opportunity should be given to people who have less to start with and need a kickstart and not on race. Sorry but the argument that the past was unfair in one direction so we can justify unfairness in the opposite direction does not work for me.

The reality of the modern world is that genetics does have a huge impact on how you move through life. Not the genetics of race nor colour but the genetics of your parents. First off there are the inherited characteristics that enable you to be good at sport, maths, acting, cooking or other similar skills. Second, and more importantly, there are the genetics that come with your parents and their attitude to life. I was very lucky in having two parents that were confident and successful people who made it their job to ensure that I had the similar attitudes.

They gave me the confidence to try anything and everything I wanted to. The lack of a fear of failure was important so that life was there for me to take on as I wished. They also were happy if I went to University and pursued a career in law, enter the army or if I wanted to get a job as a truck driver. All they insisted was that I chose to do what I did because I wanted to and that I did it well. Maybe we should develop a test of parents and depending on how they go will determine what sort of government or other assistance you are eligible for.

The sooner everyone judges the people around them on how they treat others and how they live the better our world will be. We should assist those that need help for whatever reason and reward those that work harder and work more with the people around them. It is time to be fair to all in everything we do. We only exist in the present and should only judge people by who and what they are now. We must stop living in the past and trying to make amends for the sins of our ancestors.

Life is far too short to be fixated on the past. For every minute you are worried about what happened in the past you are wasting a minute to enjoy the present. Same with the future. We need to plan for what will happen next week, month or year but again time spent focused on that distracts you from the present. I have never met anyone who has died and said they should have spent more time in the past nor the future. Then again I haven't spoken to anyone who has died but I am sure if I did they would say this.

Let us all celebrate what we do each day and those we do it with. You do not have to like everyone but please accept them for who they are and just enjoy the world around you. Each day we must work through different levels of stress and pressure but at the end of the day we should go to bed with a clear head ready to approach the new day with a positive attitude.
