Clive's Comments

Over the last few months I have been commenting on the state of Victoria's finances. It just keeps getting worse whilst services continue to be cut. There is little any of us can do as we voted this government back in for another four years in 2022. All the predictions of the gloomy economists are coming true and we just have to live with increased taxes and lower services. I do feel sorry for the common folk with these crazy land tax bills.

I was at a function and met a couple who have a small investment property worth around $1m – land value of about $500,000. Nothing flash and they had a small mortgage so the rent was covering those payments, rates, repairs, water and land tax. Last year they inherited a property with a rundown house on the coast. His mother had lived there for fifty or so years. She bought it for a small sum and had done little maintenance on it. It was now in need of a lot of money to make it to a legal rental standard. It had also grown in value such that it is now worth $5m. The majority of this is the land alone as it is subdividable and the house would be knocked down.

The family wants to keep the house the parents had lived in for the memories and for their kids however they just received the Land Tax bill of $98000. I am not sure how the government thinks a middle class working family will suddenly find this sort of money. Sure they could borrow for this year but it will only be more next year. Even if they sell it they are still liable for the total bill. I know there are many in Victorian community who think owning land for investment is criminal but where is the fairness in this?...

...It does get worse as I read an article that says Victoria now has the worst trade deficit per person in the country. We are importing around $11,000 more than we export/produce per person. So the tax base is also shrinking as well as an increasing interest rate. If this was my business I would be having many sleepless nights. Not sure if our Treasurer is!

Enough of our poor state performance. It is interesting watching the weather this year. We have had one of the coldest starts to winter for several years with lots of severe frosts. Our dirt road is very dusty which should not be the case this far into winter. Looking over recent rainfall and we have had a dry May/June. This is pointing to a dry Spring which is great for the industry for 2024 but what will happen in 2025?

After several quite wet years and mild summers most of temperate Australia is well set for a dry year. Most dams are full and most rivers are running high even before the main winter rains and succeeding now melts have arrived. An early and fine spring would be just the thing for the nursery and landscape industry. We seem to have a lot more younger people and families becoming home gardeners so this could a good year for a good year.

The brings us back to the real questions we all face every winter. We need to plan early spring potting to try and maximize late spring sales. The questions are always how many and what varieties? We are a fashion industry but it is getting much harder to predict the fashion. Having had a few wet years the 'drought driven demand for natives' isn't a big influence. Covid drove a demand for edibles which is levelling out. Strappy leaved foliage has run its course and houses are smaller so large trees are not so popular. Will the demand be for conifers, perennials, edimentals, grasses or some other group? Indoor plants have been popular so what about patio plants will they find a following?

As a propagator we are trying to guess all this for 2025 which is even harder. We are looking at what is happening overseas but in most cases we are ahead of European trends, different from Asian trends and US is still basically tree and shrubs. The biggest seller is still 'boxwood' with passing interest in other flowering shrubs. In 2023 their biggest seller on the east coast was a lavender called 'Phenomenal' (we are hoping to have it available in late 2025). Nothing special except that it is an English style lavender that is also a good oil producer.

There is the challenge for the New Year 2024/5. What colour will be the most fashionable in plants? Will it be the same as the clothes industry or will it be out on its own? So good luck with picking the next must have colour and we hope that the new financial year will be a great one. Victoria maybe broke but our nursery industry is strong and growing!
