Clive's Comments

January is gone and we move into the last of summer. Kids back to school and we settle back into the normal day to day life. So far we have had very few warm and no hot days in Melbourne and most of Australia seems to have been much cooler than normal. There were some fires but nothing like normal and far more floods than usually occur over the November – January period.

There is a level of community anger over the huge discrepancy between what the weather bureau predicted and what occurred. Probably a bit unfair as weather prediction is notoriously unreliable however there is a sense by many that the bureau's predictions are biased to show the expected affects of climate change. True or not it is what some believe and either way the mild summer has done well for our industry.

We have passed another Australia day with the regular outcry about it not being a day of celebration. There are so many views, comments and suggestions that we are losing the whole idea of celebrating this nation and all the people who call it home. Personally I feel we should be celebrating it at this time of year and maybe if we returned to the last Monday in January it would be more palatable. Others want a complete change but that will be hard. It seems that every poll I read or heard on radio said that 70% to 80% of the Australian community would rather it wasn't changed. So what to do!...

...We live in a great country and there is far more pulling us together than setting us apart but over the past decade we seem to be finding more things to divide us. Overall we live in an extremely tolerant society that accepts all people for who they are not what they are. I have also lived and worked in the US and UK and both have far more issues of racial bias, sexist behaviour, intolerance of sexual identity and problems with religious beliefs. For most Australians these are not attitudes that are acceptable.

As Australians we have one of the highest levels of health and education available to the widest spread of the community. We used to have an amazing ability to laugh at ourselves and see the humour in the world around us with out prejudice. We approached problems and disasters with a simple 'She'll be right mate!'attitude. So much so that it is a philosophy rather than words of comfort. Sure it would often result in lower than ideal outcomes but it spoke of a way of life where whatever happens we will get through it and your mates will be there to help.

We now seem to have more desire to focus on what is wrong in the world and you are defined by your ancestry rather than the way you live and how you treat those around you. Many people feel they do not really live in a world of free speech. Sure we all have the legal right to say and believe what we want but don't dare be too public with it. There are so many issues being debated in the media and promulgated by governments and corporations for which any opposition is not tolerated. Perhaps this is why the No vote was so strong. Not because people were against the proposal of righting past wrongs, acknowledging the Indigenous people as the first Australian and improving the living conditions in the poorer parts of the country. Maybe they just wanted to say no without conflict from those around them.

As we live in a great country we work in a fantastic industry. The vast majority or nursery workers are honest people with a love of plants and life. Most are keen to share their knowledge and experience and will assist all who want to grow more plants. We are a key part of producing two of the three basics of life – air and food. We are also important in giving an emotional connection between daily lives and nature. Our products allow people to step away from a busy world to work with a living and growing thing that has no judgment.

Growing plants is definitely a science with all the objective analysis and recourse of research and understanding. The problem is that there are just so many variables that it can be hard to really understand what a plant needs under all conditions. Every year gives a new set of influences which require different responses. This makes it hard, if not impossible to teach people all they need to know. So much comes from connecting with other growers and just age. With each year a good plant grower learns a bit more and if they are really good they share a bit more knowledge.

IPPS is a great exponent of this philosophy and forms a conduit between the wisdom of age with the passion of youth. The problem is it easy to lose that wisdom. Last year we lost several leaders in plant production such as Ed Bunker in October and this year we have started with the passing of Frank Hammond. These men and others like them have helped build the Australian nursery industry but more importantly they take with them decades of growing, observing and learning about the plants we all grow. We should value our industry elders and make sure we learn from them and then as we become the elders we must make sure we share our knowledge. I worry we are losing too much too quickly.
