Clive's Comments

Another month passes by. We are all (hopefully) a month older and a month wiser. It is funny how some people say that hate getting old. Well personally I like getting old as it is better than the alternative. You have to laugh at all the people who want anti-aging creams and lotions. The only way to stop yourself aging is to die, which is a bit drastic. What we want to do is get older, to age but not show it and to keep our health.

The last point is the key to it all. More so than money, property or even family as they are nothing if you have bad health. We are all lucky to be living and aging now rather than last century. I was diagnosed with Stage 4 Melanoma in December 2020 and at first was told I had a 20% of being alive in 5 years. Luckily our family doctor sent me to a leading oncologist who was part of the group trialling the new Immunotherapy. He had been working with it for a few years and felt it was going to become the standard treatment for melanoma and even many other cancers. He gave me a 95% chance of being alive at the end of 2025. So far so good!

I have now been on the treatment for four years and aside from some skin rashes and constant tiredness in the afternoons I am doing well. Indeed other than a blood test and a thirty minute drip every four weeks the disease has had little effect on my life. Sure there is the constant thought that one month I will go in he will say it has got away. He doesn't believe that will happen but I still can't keep the thoughts away...

...The new drugs used for immunotherapy have a lot fewer side effects than the two current treatments of chemo and radio therapy. They are now being used in many other cancers as a stand alone or combined treatment. Some with success and some not but the process has revolutionised survival rates and life quality for the community. A cancer diagnosis is no longer an automatic death sentence.

The way we talk of cancer actually adds to the emotional pressures of having the disease. Many forms have high rates of survival but there are also some that have very low rates. For many with the disease it is the emotional roller coaster that makes it hard to focus on getting healthy. We still have movies and soapies where the characters are taken into a quite room with the doctor and a loved one to be told they have cancer. They then go home and gather family and friends to 'deal with the health problem'. Lots of tears and fears.

We also have the way we talk about people who have the disease as 'fighting the cancer'. Finally when they die, maybe not even from the cancer, we hear 'Fred Smith died after a long battle with cancer'. There are thousands of Australians with type one or type two diabetes, high blood pressure, bipolar, depression or any of many other diseases that untreated would end up in death. We rarely hear that Fred Smith died after a long battle with high blood pressure and stress or similar.

So I am lucky to be living in this era and even more so to be living in Australia. Sure we have huge problems with the economy, cost of living, rising prices of coffee and criminal state and federal debt levels. Yes the medical and education systems are underfunded and struggling but that is due to government mismanagement and incorrect priorities in government spending. Our systems are structurally good and some of the best in the world.

We have just gone through the annual self flagellation of how bad we are because the country was settled by people with some poor ethics. However we have also had settlement in Australia by migrants from all over the world who have helped build a country with a great lifestyle and phenomenal opportunities to make the best of our lives. I would hate to have a cancer diagnosis in most other countries.

It is time we stop this constant battle over what happened in the 18th century and focus on what we are doing now. We can comment on what is happening in the world around us but we should focus on the people living here, now. We lead, or at least are right up there, the world in so many great human endeavours. For a country of 25 million people we push the boundaries in health, science, sport and taking in and living with people from all over the world.

Every city and town in Australia has its own culture and in the vast majority of them, the residents like each other and in times of need all get in and help. I have travelled widely around the country and are yet to see a town that doesn't have a good feeling. I am hoping, and expecting, that 2025 will be a year that we come together as a nation. We stop trying to find what is wrong with all or any of us. Instead we look at what we do well and how we can be seen as a united nation focused on a positive future. All we have to do is work together and grow lots of really good plants!"

Clive Larkman
