Clive's Comments

A month can be a long time. It is now late October and a week since the referendum. Di and I flew out of Australia on the 14th. We knew what the result was going to be but too early for the full results to be known. Personally I was not an advocate for the Voice as it was proposed. I think we should acknowledge that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders were the first peoples of this land and adjacent islands. I do not believe that the Constitution should give rights or representation to anyone based on race, gender or religion. I believe we should do a lot better for the underprivileged indigenous people (as we should for all underprivileged people) but the proposed Voice was not the answer. Also if it was the answer the problem would be fixed in a year, decade or two but the Voice was forever. I do not believe that in 200 years it would still be needed but inserting it into the constitution would mean it was still there. If it wasn't the answer we couldn't remove it.

The whole debate brought out some very unpleasant behaviour and some strong divisions. Now we must do whatever we can to remove those divisions and bring our great country together again. In the debate we heard of the problems suffered by a large percentage of Indigenous peoples – but not all. We must all address these problems. There seems to be a...

.. will to do so and there is certainly the structure in place and the funds are there. It just requires everyone to pull in one direction and stop building private power bases.

We have been in US now for a bit over a week so haven't been able to follow the fall out from the result. What I have seen and been asked about is the 'vote against indigenous rights'. As many feared the international press has reported that the Australian people have voted against better rights for the Aboriginal population. As soon as I stated what we were voting on everyone I spoke to were not surprised about the result. One thing Americans understand is the importance and pluses/minuses of amendments to constitutions.

We are here for an IPPS conference and tour which means lots of parks, gardens and nurseries. Like everything in the US they are big. Some just big and some ridiculously big. What is amazing is the volumes of plants done across a very small range of trees and shrubs. We visit nurseries with tens of, to hundreds of acres of box, privet, hydrangea and a few other genera. The other things that jumps out as you move around is the suburban home garden. First very few have fences, they are houses and sheds with large lawns. There maybe a few shrubs and large trees but very few traditional Australian/English type gardens. Explains the large volumes of traditional shrubs.

The garden centres are generally quite large and have a wide range of plants with big sections of trees and shrubs. There is a domination of a few marketing brands and not a great diversity. However due to the harshness of their winters, which of course coincide with Thanksgiving and Christmas they all have large gift and home ware sections. At the moment they are full of orange pumpkins and everything Halloween which is slowly making way for Christmas decorations etc.

November is spring racing carnival and the month we transition form spring to summer. It is also the month where we want to get balance of spring plants out the door to set us up for the warm summer months and slow down in post Christmas sales. For the grower it is the last chance to get plants potted up and growing for the Autumn sales. Hope you have had a good spring so far and the summer heat holds off for a few more weeks. Remember Santa is only a few weeks away.
