Clive's Comments

Christmas is nearly here which means Santa is not far away. No matter what happens in politics, sport and around the world we basically know that Santa comes once a year and all the kids just get so excited. So do many adults as we all fall under the magic spell that is Christmas. Decorating the house and tree is always fun and standing back and looking at all the colour just feels so good. In fact it makes the home seem a bit boring when Christmas isn't here.

It is also fun when we first go shopping for a few more Christmas items and then go out to buy presents for friends and loved ones. Then finally (for those who are cooking) we plan our meals and start buying the ingredients. In some case we are making puddings and cakes weeks ahead. Of course there are the religious aspects that are very important for the followers of the relevant religions. There are strict believers who live and breathe the birth of Christ and then the less so who believe it and like the pageantry. Believe or not the key messages of love, give and receive, care for others and overall enjoy life are good ones that harm no-one but help many.

Of course there are the critics and people who just want to stop everything we do. They have a philosophical dislike of anything to do with Christian Australia and will support any other...

...religion or culture. No matter how nasty or cruel or bigoted they feel it has to be better than Christian Australia. Then they demand that public bodies remove anything to do with the religious side of Christmas be removed as it causes offence to non-Christians. They belong to the group of people I call CAVE dwellers – Committees Against Virtually Everything. They just want to stop the greater part of our community from being happy.

First off, very few members of non-Christian faiths find Christmas offensive. Second, nowhere in the Christmas message is there a negative desire to hurt others and finally there is so much joy and happiness with and between families and friends. All positive! Other than the sadness that occurs with those who have lost family members through death and illness or due to family break ups we are in a fun and happy period. My heart goes out to those who have had a loss but it happens to us all. Whatever you believe or do you will have friends and family members who die during the year. If not this year then next it is life and the sorrow will pass.

I cannot understand why there are so many people who just want to pull Christmas apart. I understand there are many people who do not celebrate the religious side of the festive season but why do they need to attack those of us who do? Why must they impose their views on the majority of our society. Go back fifty years and there would be very few Australians who didn’t celebrate Christmas. It was part of what made an Australian family.

Then there are those who criticise Christmas as something created and perpetuated by those nasty people who make up big business. Sure there is a lot of money spent and many businesses rely on Christmas but is that really a problem? Of course all the marketing is centred around Christmas and the silly adds that play on Santa or utilise a Christmas Carols will dominate the media. This is no different to easter, Father’s and Mother’s Day and everything else that happens during the year. Business is not bad and it is what enables us to live so well in this country. Also if we are spending money on gifts for others, what is wrong?

As we have grown as a nation with people from all over the planet we have started to celebrate other cultural festivals. Chinese New Year is huge in most of Melbourne and so is the Mexican Festival of the Dead. Diwali is now becoming part of our annual calendar of events. I don’t see people demanding these celebrations lose their cultural icons. In fact the opposite occurs in that we all want them to grow and become a greater part of our society. Basically we all love to get together with family and friends and celebrate all that is good in life. They are what turn the mundane work/life into something great.

So I say to everyone, enjoy the next month or so. Spend time with those that are dear to you, remember those you have lost and indulge in feeling good about life. Give where appropriate, receive where appropriate and wish everyone you meet “Merry Christmas’. If you do not want to celebrate any part of the Australian culture, stay home and keep it to your self. Let the rest of us enjoy Christmas.

All of us here at Larkman Nurseries wish you and your family the most enjoyable Christmas.

Clive Larkman
