Clive's Comments

Last month I was wondering what Chinese New Year would be like. Would they be able to run any events and under what restrictions? I also wrote about the speed at which some Premiers will lockdown borders etc. I had no idea what was coming. The five-day lockdown over the one of the busiest weekends of the year was just plain overkill. I accept that there were some in the medical fraternity that believed it was needed but there were just as many that did not. There are many small family businesses that have now closed as that was going to be their chance to get some cashflow. That was their comeback weekend!

That lockdown has cost the businesses of Victoria more than just the lost income and wasted product. It has destroyed any level of confidence many have in planning for anything. We had all felt that if another lock down was to happen there would be some warning or indication so we could plan. No-one thought the government would give less than 24 hours' notice. This means that it is not safe to plan for anything until the State of Emergency is stopped. People can't plan weddings, schools can't plan camps or events, businesses can't plan promotions or anything that requires any level of investment. You really can't buy perishable product more than 28 hours in advance.

It is time the government and the medical community came to accept there is a level of risk if we want people to live normal lives. We have to accept that there will be weeks when we have 10 or 20 active community cases. Personally, I feel that we should have allowed last weekend to happen and dealt with any outbreak that arose. In hindsight I doubt there would have been as the number of community cases barely changed before, during or after the lockdown...

...The heart break, anguish and suffering of all who lost their plans for that weekend far outweighed the benefits.

Until the State of Emergency is closed every single Victorian is living on eggshells. How often can you tell a child that the things they had been looking forward to have been cancelled? How often can a young couple plan and replan a wedding? How many times can a small family restaurant throw out thousands of dollars of waste food? How many times can employees be sent home without pay? This isn't a Bob Dylan song but real questions in a real world.

The vaccines started being administered today and of course the paranoid anti-vaccine claims will start hitting the airwaves. I have already had one comment that it is another right-wing conspiracy to control the free-thinking minds of the community. Sure there will be some serious issues with the vaccine and yes everyone has the right to not have the jab but what do we do when that right clashes with the rights of others to be free of Covid. At the moment it is a hard discussion as we don't really know if it works nor do we really know if there are any side effects. Then there is the bigger question of, will the vaccine stop you carrying and spreading the virus?

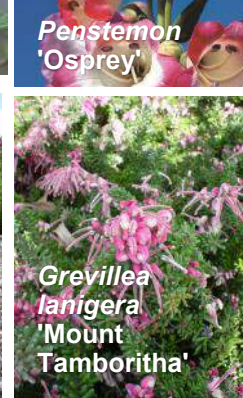

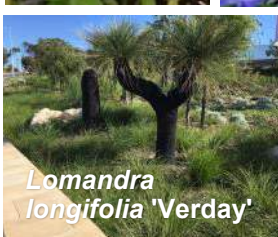

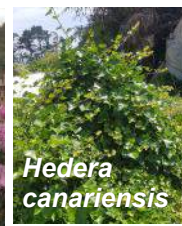

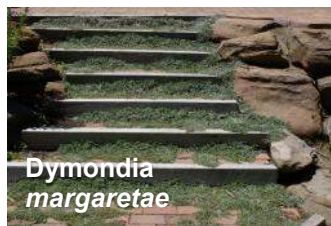

The legislation will not allow employers to insist that their staff have the vaccine. However, if non-vaccinated staff can spread it to others where will the employer sit if one staff member gives it to another? Is it a work-related illness or is it just life? Will the infected staff member be able to sue the employer? These are just some of the myriads of issues we will have to deal with if the world returns to some sense of normality. As usual they will be addressed through the courts where some people will be hurt, and others will win. The lawyers will of course win either way.

Di and I just spent a weekend in central Melbourne walking around the streets, a bit of shopping, went to a live show and had lots to eat and drink. Most of the venues were so happy to be trading again but they were all angry about the previous weekend. They were glad to have survived a very hard twelve months and nearly all said if it wasn't for Job Keeper, they would have at best lost their staff and at worst not come through. However, there was this great sense of relief among the people living and working in the city. Melbourne is on its way back and we are all happy it is.

The question is where to now for us? Should we be planning for another busy winter? Will the new gardeners keep planting and growing new plants? What will happen to the surge in demand for indoor and patio plants? These are all questions we must ask every year at this time. We have always needed to plan but now we have another overlay to consider. I think we can bank on a busier than average winter but not as busy as 2020. So, it is time to get some plants in pots, on the ground and growing for a busy autumn/winter. Put the plants on the ground now because there is one guarantee; if you don't have them on them ready for sale, you certainly won't make the most of any winter demand!
